Fund manager's commentary

After a solid first half both equity and fixed income markets showed negative returns in the third quarter. Financial market participants finally took note of central banks' message that interest rates will be "higher for longer". Such developments resulted in negative returns for bonds in the period. With rising bond yields there hasn't been a good place to hide in equities as well. In the quarter nine out of 11 "S&P 500" index sectors, and five out of seven MSCI major region indices had negative returns. At the end of September, central bank softened their stance somewhat, it is likely that the dynamics of future bonds and stock prices will mostly depend on actual inflation and macroeconomic data.
