Fund manager's commentary

After a positive first half fixed income market showed negative returns in the third quarter. Financial market participants finally took note of central banks' message that interest rates will be "higher for longer". Such developments resulted in negative returns for bonds in the period. Larger bond market losses in the third quarter came as the U.S. 10-year Treasury yield – the benchmark for world borrowing costs – has surged roughly 75 basis points to just above 4.6 %. Germany's 10-year Bund yield finished the quarter at nearly 3 %, its highest in 12 years. European government bonds were the laggards while high yield fixed income fared better. At the September meetings of the European Central Bank and the Fed, it was hinted that, as inflation declines as expected, further tightening of monetary policy, i.e. raising interest rates, should not be necessary. As bond yields increased to historic highs while inflation rates slowed, after a long period of time, the fund's average yield exceeded current inflation at the end of September.
